2022 Results

The results of the mental health survey are quite startling and very emotional at the same time. 89.5% of respondents have seen an increase in their workload since the pandemic; 76.3% of respondents are experiencing burnout from their workload from the last 2 years; 86.8% of respondents believe there isn't enough awareness about mental health in our sector and 60.5% of respondents believe there is a mental health crisis in the glazing industry. These are just some of the headlines!

Introduction

Mental health in the glass and glazing industry is often unspoken about. That's why we launched an industry mental health survey in April 2022. At DGCOS we want to understand the thoughts and experiences of mental health in the fenestration sector.

We hope that the results of the survey provide some valuable insights which will help the industry put together some form of support for the people working within the sector.

- > Not sure.
- > Other than educating the general public, I don't see how.
- > Have no idea.
- > Days based on mental health.
- > Get orders right first time!!!
- > Talk more.
- > I think the problems are bigger than this industry. Not enough young people want to work in this business.
- > Not sure.
- > Unsure as I have never experienced these issues before.
- > To be more aware.
- > This is an issue with the customers so I have no idea!
- > More compassion and empathy needed for people who suffer with mental health issues.
- > Taking time to speak to staff and ease work loads.
- > Stricter quality control from the very poor manufacturers. Not sure what else, but there is definitely a lot of stress out there in this industry.
- > Normalise it, open the discussion, be more inclusive.
- > Anything that increases empathy, kindness good we are all in this together. Stuff that implies poor you "othering" likely to backfire and creates the atmosphere "I better keep this to myself".
- > Stop the Boys club at trade body level and have an open industry.
- > You are doing already, by bringing the subject out in industry media.
- > Stereotypical male 'man up & deal with it' syndrome.
- > Training events.
- > Don't know.

We need to get the youth engaged at school or college level showing them that this is a rewarding career where you can make a good living.

Comments

As a self employed sole trader I manage my stress levels myself if I don't like a job or think its to big for me I don't do it hence keeping stress levels at low levels, my main stress is trying to get through to government organisations tax customs RTI and you have to sit and wait on the phone for a hour getting nowhere.

The last two years have been hell!

Talking is good and we need to have a charity set up but away from trade bodies.

Consumers need to remember we are people too and we are not fobbing them off there are genuine supply issues and it is taking it toll.

The words 'mental health' are being used too much, certain people need to focus on work and having fun instead of talking balls about things that are probably way off the mark for being mental health issues.

All industries and walks of life people are suffering, we are all in an environmental crisis.

Maybe it is just down to the individual as we are all different but I take things personal and I run my business on a very friendly nature so when we get bad customers it affects me badly.

Really find it difficult to comprehend how so many excuses have been directed at this COVID pandemic. Why are materials arriving the wrong colour the wrong size? Surely this is just human error-less is this because nobody seems to care anymore!

I haven't heard if there is a mental health crisis within the glass and glazing industry however, I believe there is a national crisis.

I really feel there should be a massive investment in apprenticeships for small businesses. Too much emphasis has been placed on Mickey Mouse degrees over the last 20+ years and now industries like ours are paying the price with a serious lack of skilled workers. We need to get the youth engaged at school or college level showing them that this is a rewarding career where you can make a good living.

Running a small business is a hard job that requires a great deal of commitment. Working really long hours year after year to make the business viable really burns you out and does catch up with you as you get older. It's a tough business to be in and I've often thought there must be easier ways to make a living. I've got a few good guys working for me but they are all approaching 60 so will be retiring soon. I'm only 41 and will consider leaving the industry when they do retire as I haven't been able to find anyone to relate them.
